

Mr Graham Keene

Mr Graham Keene is an established Consultant Trauma and Orthopaedic Surgeon at the Nuffield Health Cambridge Hospital and Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge. He has been in practice for over 14 years, specialising in hip and knee surgery, including arthroscopic surgery, and primary and revision hip and knee joint replacement surgery, including hip resurfacing. During the past 14 years, he has done over 3000 hip replacements, resurfacings and revisions. He treats patients of a wide age range – over the past few years, his youngest joint replacement patient was 16 and the oldest 98. He finds the treatment of young adults with hip pain stimulating, as there are so many different underlying treatable causes, but also enjoys seeing more elderly patients reap the rewards of joint replacement surgery and a return to an active independent pain free lifestyle.

Mr Keene has worked with anaesthetists, physiotherapists, occupational therapists and nursing staff, to bring down the length of hospital stay after hip and knee replacement surgery, and improve the quality of patient care and rehabilitation, both at the Nuffield Hospital Cambridge, Spire Cambridge Lea Hospital Impington and Addenbrooke's Hospital. He is sensitive to the current requirement to continue post-operative VTE prophylaxis after discharge home following joint replacement surgery and grateful to those of you who had extended a patient's prescription for subcutaneous Clexane® – hopefully he will soon start using the oral anticoagulant Rivaroxaban (Xarelto®), which will be a little easier for patients.

Mr Keene has taken a cautious approach to the use of metal-on-metal hip bearings over the past decade, being very much aware of the current concerns about painful metal-on-metal hip replacements and resurfacings, which may require special investigation and assessment. If any of your patients are worried about pain in their metal-on-metal hip replacement or have other concerns about their replacement/resurfacing, he would be pleased to review them urgently.

Mr Keene is very willing to see patients of all ages with hip and knee problems. He holds regular clinics and operating sessions in Cambridge.

Appointments are made by his PA on 01223 517808.
